Cargill investing nearly $50 million in Elk River

Expansion of its Global Animal Nutrition Innovation Center to include new unit for dairy innovation, a visitor's space and state-of-the-art lab for nutrient R&D

Special to the Star News

Faced with volatile commodity markets and changing regulations and consumer needs, animal producers are operating in an increasingly complex world. To help customers respond more quickly in this dynamic environment, Cargill is expanding and renovating its Global Animal Nutrition Innovation Center in Elk River, located just 30 minutes from its global headquarters.

Along with a facility in Velddriel, the Netherlands and the soon to be operating Changrong R&D center in China, the Elk River site serves as a hub of the company's global network of 15 animal nutrition research and technology application centers. These sites work around the clock to explore, innovate, and think ahead of customers' challenges in navigating

‘This is the largest investment Cargill’s animal nutrition business has made in innovation. We are taking a significant step towards what is going to create state-of-the-art technologies for our world. We want to be the best animal nutrition partner globally, and our customers expect us to bring innovations that make them more competitive, efficient, and sustainable. When they choose us as a trusted partner, they rely on us as a conduit to new technology. Therefore, we must be in the forefront and move faster to continue delivering on our promise to customers.’

according to a Cargill press release.

The nearly $50 million investment will upgrade animal facilities, including a new dairy innovation unit, construct a larger on-site feed mill, create a visitor’s space, and build a state-of-the-art laboratory for nutrient research and development. Designed to serve dairy, poultry, swine and aqua nutrition customers and the testing needs of other Cargill businesses, the Global Innovation Center hosts more than 2,000 visitors a year.

Business leaders held the official groundbreaking on April 19 for the upgraded facility that will open in the spring of 2023. The site has been operational for Cargill since 1958. There, teams develop new methods of nutrient measurement to deeply understand how ingredients feed animals and support their perfor-
